(312) Mr. LeBel (Rimouski) – 7 June 2018

To the Minister of Sustainable Development, the Environment and the Fight Against Climate Change

The goal of the Chaleur Terminals project in New Brunswick is to open up Alberta's and Saskatchewan's heavy oil sands for export to Europe, India, Asia and the United States, by using the Canadian National's (CN) railway line to cross the Bas-Saint-Laurent and Gaspésie regions, right through to the Port of Belledune in New Brunswick as the point of export. Thus, 170,000 barrels of crude oil will transit each day between Calgary and Belledune, which represents 240 tank cars that will cross Québec's cities and villages, passing by schools, daycares and hospitals, for the sole purpose of getting the material to world markets.

The project received New Brunswick's environmental approval in July 2014 and the Chaleur Terminals developer obtained a building permit for 12 oil reservoirs in the Port of Belledune. Furthermore, the project never was subjected to a proper environmental study on the consequences of oil transport by rail. In 2015, the citizen group Non à une marée noire dans le Saint-Laurent tabled a petition signed by over 10,000 people asking that the National Assembly of Québec firmly oppose the transportation by rail, on its territory, of petroleum products intended for export, particularly owing to the high risks for ecosystems and public safety. We have also asked on several occasions for a BAPE assessment on the project, and several cities voted resolutions to that effect, notably Rimouski and Montréal. The federal Minister of the Environment, Catherine McKenna, was also called upon by environmental groups and several municipalities, including Rimouski, to have the project subjected to an environmental assessment.

So far, both levels of government have refused to act in this matter. And yet communities continue to be concerned by the potential impacts of hazardous materials. Following the Lac-Mégantic accident, the Transportation Safety Board of Canada (TSB) was not reassuring on the issue of surveillance, and there are still many train derailments in Canada. Moreover, the environmental impact of a possible tragedy could be major for ecosystems, particularly along the Matapédia and Restigouche salmon rivers.

Although construction of the oil terminal does not appear to have started, owing to market conditions, we know that when the developer starts construction work, it will be difficult to demand a proper environmental study, since construction permits will already have been issued.

My questions are the following:

Would it be possible to have an updated progress report on the Chaleur Terminals project in New Brunswick?

Is the agreement with Canadian National still on the table?

Is the Government of Québec concerned about the safety of communities and potential consequences for the environment, and how does it intend to oversee this rail transport project, considering that the CN does not fare very well with regard to maintenance and control of its rail transportation?
