EXPLANATORY NOTES

This bill amends the Education Act in order to clarify the financial contributions that may be required of students and their parents.

Financial contributions may thereby be required in regard to certain services provided within the scope of special school projects determined by regulation of the Minister and certain school activities determined by such regulation.

The bill clarifies the scope of the right to free instructional material and empowers the Minister to determine, by regulation, the material to which this right does or does not apply.

Furthermore, the governing board must approve the financial contributions that are proposed by the principal. The Minister is empowered to determine, by regulation, the standards for those contributions.

Under the bill, school boards must see to it that their schools and vocational training centres do not require payment of fees contrary to law, including administrative fees.

The school's governing board must form, at the parents' request, a parents' committee so as to make recommendations regarding the childcare services provided by the school board.

The Government is empowered to set, by regulation, standards relating to the financial contributions required for student transportation and childcare services provided at school.

Lastly, consequential amendments and transitional measures are set out.
