28 March 2019

Moment of reflection

The President issued a directive on the point raised by the Official Opposition House Leader on 27 March 2019 regarding disclosure of the content of the Minister of Education and Higher Education's statement to journalists before he gave the statement in the House.

RULING FROM THE CHAIR

The Chair would like to begin by highlighting that it is not the Chair's role to decide whether or not there has been a breach of rights or privileges. Rather, the Chair must determine whether the content of the Minister's statement could be forwarded to journalists.

The House of Commons' Standing Orders do not address the confidentiality of the texts of Ministers' statements. It is customary, out of courtesy, for ministers to notify only the Opposition Critics of their intention to make such a statement in the House.

This Federal precedent is therefore not compatible with Québec parliamentary law. Standing Order 55 states that a copy of a statement by any minister must be delivered to the President and to the leaders of the parliamentary groups one hour before the Routine Proceedings are to be taken. This is not intended to make the Minister's statement public, but rather to allow the Opposition groups to prepare their comments.

The same Standing Order also specifies that a copy of the Minister's statement must be delivered "in confidence" to the President and leaders of the parliamentary groups. This clarification stresses the importance placed on ensuring that the content of the Minister's statement remains confidential and that it is not made public as a result of this delivery.

The Chair also recalls that certain information must be communicated to Members before being forwarded to third parties. This is true for bills, reports to be tabled in the Assembly, written questions to be entered on the Order Paper and Notices and the Opening Speech of the Session. There is no indication that it should be otherwise for Ministers' statements.

In the past, Québec parliamentary jurisprudence has recognized that, as the concept of “Minister’s statement” is broad, ministers can choose any subject they deem appropriate, provided that its content is of public interest or that it concerns a government policy. A minister could just as well choose to hold a press conference on a subject instead of making a Minister’s statement.

While there are no formal press conference rules, this is not the case for Ministers’ statements. A minister who chooses the formal vehicle “Minister’s statement” to make an announcement must therefore comply with the rules governing this procedure. This means that the confidentiality of the content of the Minister’s statement must be preserved until the statement is given in the House, out of basic respect for the MNAs and their important duties of office.

The Chair is of the opinion that disclosing the content of a Minister’s statement before the statement is given in the House disturbs the balance established by the Standing Orders by allowing the media to report on the statement before Opposition groups have had an opportunity to comment on it. The fact that the subject of a Minister’s statement is the responsibility of the executive branch is unimportant, as is the fact that text disclosed to journalists may have been under embargo or not. While it is the journalists’ role to report on what takes place in parliamentary proceedings, it is essential, in such cases, that the elected representatives be informed first of information intended for them first and foremost.

The Chair concludes, stating that it is concerned that it should, once again, have to warn Members about disclosing information that must first be shared with the parliamentarians. The Chair hopes that its message is heard by one and all.
